I object to the relocation of Waterbeach Station. The plan to relocate the station does not seem to take into account the needs of existing residents of Waterbeach. I agree that the current station isn't in very good condition, but the way that the move is being approached isn't being dealt with very well. Rather than having the new station in the new town, why not have it in between the old village and the new town so it can be shared? To the south of Bannold Road crossing might be appropriate. This would definitely be seen as improving both the new town and the old village. Another alternative would be to keep the old station and extend the platforms so that there will be 2 stations in the village.

The other issue I have with the station being moved is that there would be no good cycle or pedestrian route between the old one and the new one, and this has not been addressed at all. Current plans seem to be to put the route down Way Lane but this road will have a massive amount more traffic down it from the new development towards Horningsea and the A14.
